THE SAME SKY

Written by Claudio Aguilera
Illustrated by Alexis Segovia

From 8 years old

48 pages
Hard cover + double gate folded
26 x 21 cm
ISBN: 978-956-9825-38-5
*Rights available to all languages

A book of poetic and symbolic value with two stories that invite us to deep reflections on science, life, death, and the nature of things. Through those two short stories, children will be able to immerse themselves in the Atacama landscape, which will guide them along a path of astronomical research to think on the beliefs that ancient civilizations had as well.

First, or later (depending on how the book is open), we will learn the story of a girl who lives in the city and, after the loss of a family member, starts looking for answers at the sky, motivated by the legacy of that beloved one.

On the other hand, we will learn about the story of an Atacama boy who, after the loss of his mother, looks for her into the sky and the stars, discovering the beliefs of his native people, culture, and family.

In this narrative poem full of symbolism, a little girl becomes sick from having eaten a plant she should not eat, and this produces a growing and dominant anguish in her mother and neighbors.

The characters' worry and anxiety surround the girl until help arrives in an unexpected way: the moon enters the little girl's house and takes away, at least a little, the green color of the illness.

What kind of connection does the girl have with that moon that is now also green? A book with powerful collage illustrations, which plays with the concepts of identity, femininity, motherhood, and collaborative dialogue between women.

- Poetry about girls and transformation
- Motherhood and sorority
- Link between moon, plants and women
- Children's mischiefs

Luz Malamud / Writer, editor, and teacher of creative writing. Some of the books she has published are Yer el rey, Stories in rhyme to read on stage, Laugh at sea, The yawn, Where the music lives, To be a great dad, Ocean space, Bigottini the magician, Why does the bear cry?, among others. The book Where the music lives, illustrated by Nadia Romero Marchesini, was selected among the 12 finalists for the Cuatrogatos Foundation award. She won first prize in the III Album Book Contest organized by Soy Autor from Argentina, with the book The Sailor Tim O'Nel.

Illustrated by Lu Paul

From 4 years old

28 pages
Hardcover
20 x 26 cm
ISBN: 978-956-9825-41-5
*Rights available to all languages

We can hear hundreds of different noises in the city!

Babies crying, dogs barking, a hammer knocking a wall, a door being closed; what else can we hear?

Where will the noise of the hairdressers' scissors, the fire engine's alarm, the drills of the building under construction and the shout of the market vendor go?

In this funny book, a little kid asks everyone around where are all the noises gone at the end of the day.

A book to ask questions like what noises can we find in the countryside or at the sea, and what will be the difference between noises and sounds?

- ➔ A book about noises from the city
- ➔ Colorful illustrations with plenty of funny details
- ➔ A reflection on little things around us
- ➔ Journey of discovery for little kids
- ➔ Different professions

The sun and the moon are unavoidable objects of attention for human beings, essential to all cultures.

The moon orchestrates the tides, it has been crucial for the beginning of life on planet earth and sets the rhythm of the world. On the other hand, we owe our water and life to the sun.

In this new collection of illustrated poems by Mar Benegas and Blanco Pantoja, the sun and the moon converse, and tell us what they see, while they play an eternal game of opposition and union. This text show us how they move away and get closer at certain hours of the day, sometimes being light and sometimes being dark.

● Award winning authors

● Poetry about the sky and constellations

● A fascinating dialogue that shows the importance of the sun and the moon for any culture

Mar Benegas / Writer and lecturer specialized in poetry, reading and creativity. She is the director of the Conference for the Promotion of Reading, Writing and Observation (JALEO) in Valencia. DICE EL SOL Despunta el d a,
y clarea el cielo.
La lechuza vuela
hacia el tronco hueco.
Trocito de luna
es su blanco cuerpo.
Y en sus ojos guarda,
sin ella saberlo,
la noche redonda
pintada de negro.

Se escucha un susurro,
dice el sol: «Ya vengo.»

CONTESTA LA LUNA
« Ya vienes?, te espero.»
Le dice la luna:
«Ser  de misterio,
de nieve y de duna.»

A girl seems to be looking for words in a game of meanings and memories, but we soon realize that these unexpected semantic relationships also tell us about the possibility of creation that words have, their ability to delimit our world defining who we are.

Can we create our own personal or family story from what we name? And what happens with the things we don't have or we cannot name?

The end of this book is all about the possibility of change and the power of words. Recommended for children from 8 years old, with no age limit.

Any day can be perfect to invite friends to a surprise party.

Some of them will prefer to play music and dance; others will want to eat and laugh or talk for hours with everyone else.

But the funniest thing is that there will be many different guests waiting for someone very special that will blow out the candles on the cake.

It doesn't matter who goes to the party or how they look like, the most important thing is to have a nice moment all together!

- Diversity and acceptance
- Celebration
- Sweet and funny characters
- Community

Cristina Sitja Rubio / She studied Fine Arts and Photography at Concordia University in Montreal and did a master's degree at the Art Institute in San Francisco, California. In addition to illustrating, she is dedicated to ceramics and engraving. She has had exhibitions in Europe, particularly in Spain and Germany. Her illustrations have been selected twice at the Bologna Fair and she has published several books with important publishers in Europe and Latin America.

THE FIG TREE

This album rescues a great poem by the uruguayan Juana de Ibarbourou (1892/1979) to put it in conversation with the current feminism. Questioning stereotypes and reflecting on the subjectivity of beauty and acceptance without adornment or artifice, this book also tells us about the weight that the words of others have on our self-esteem, resilience and empathy.

The fig tree inaugurates the Cordillera collection, which renews the voice of great authors from America, together with the careful work of different illustrators from the continent.

- Latinamerican poetry
- Self-esteem
- Feminism
- Discussions about beauty

Juana de Ibarbourou / In 1919 she published Las lenguas de diamante, which was followed by Cántaro fresco, and Raíz salvaje, receiving numerous awards. Through her poetry she opposed the discourse of patriarchy. In her work she laid bare the essence of her being, reflecting a feminist stance and ideology. She suffered gender-based violence and lived in seclusion in her own home, dying in Montevideo in 1979 under a military dictatorship.

Diego de Arena / Graphic designer and professional Chilean illustrator who lives in Buenos Aires. He defines his work as heterogeneous and transversal since it covers different disciplines of visual communication. He has published books with important publishers, such as CalibroscoPIO, from Argentina. Currently he is dedicated to illustrating and designing different business and editorial commissions.

How many stories are hidden under just one word? What if this was one that has evoked stories since the beginning of time? How to explore something so often told in a completely new way?

This beautiful tale answers these questions by exploring the twenty-four anagrams of the word love. The author opens the possibilities of language and, through the game, develops a world and its characters based on a single term. The images evoke the Middle East: permeated with purple, red, black and pink, they recreate the exoticism of a landscape and the atmosphere of a furtive romance.

Le pidió un beso y la princesa no le prestó atención. Si por lo menos hubiera sido verde o rosado –a la princesa le gustaban esos colores–, pero el pobre sapo era de un color sin nombre.

Por suerte, el sapo en cuestión estaba lleno de entusiasmo y tenía mucha paciencia. Después de dejar pasar unas moscas gordas y hablar un buen rato, logró que la princesa le diera un besito.

Lo que pasó entonces fue maravilloso.

El sapo se convirtió en un apuesto príncipe, que era lo que quería.

Pero lo que realmente maravilló a la princesa fue darse cuenta de que sus besos transformaban las cosas.

A fun and wonderful allegory of how the world can be transformed with small gestures of affection and lots of imagination, sometimes hidden in a book.

It's time to go to sleep, but it is not always easy. This book stays with the princess who suddenly realizes her kisses can transform any creature or thing. She starts right away! A fish becomes a bird, a stone becomes a fish, a bicycle becomes a dog whose bark sounds like a bicycle bell.

Learning through poetry about the small creatures who inhabit the garden.

A poetic journey featuring insects who live in the garden, where each page is thought in relation to the different shades of light we can perceive throughout the course of the day.

The book begins at dawn and ends at night, with a friendly snail that appears in the opening of the collection of poems. The brief stories of these little bugs that inhabit the plants are also displayed in different poetic forms (calligrams, concrete poetry, haikus, tankas, fibs and others without a specific form), with great musicality.

In the carousel of the world a revolt is brewing and the animals are upset. This funny picture book raised the environmental emergency that planet Earth suffers.

Children are the hope in this scenario. They have the sensitivity to listen to what the adult world still denies, since in a journey that belongs to all species, we have dedicated ourselves to destroying the landscape in which we live.

There is only one passenger not so welcomed in the carousel. Who will intercede on our behalf?

The moon above the mountains is gazing towards a house. The light on is seen through the window. How many of us have dreamed a thousand times of the stars, and the infinite space full of lights, colors and mysteries?

This book invites little children to play about riding meteorites, in the calm before the dream, on a journey through the galaxy, with scenes that evoke the contemplation of the night sky from the curiosity of a child.

POSTULADO

This is the story of Gaby and Diego, two children who have to spend time together because of a school assignment. Diego is an athletic kid who underestimates Gaby because of her wheelchair and Gaby is an active girl who thinks Diego knows nothing but playing basketball.

But when they met, they discovered that what appeared to be irreconcilable differences were nothing more than meaningless ideas.

Crowded streets, cold cells, war in a country perhaps not so far away, a hospital ward, warm arms like a cradle. These are some of the many spaces included in this collection of poems that invites us to reflect on the different forms of childhood.

How does a cooing sound behind bars, how to try to rest under the noise of the bombs? How does it feel to play between shootings? Each poem goes through a different scenario that reflects realities ignored by the traditional portrait of childhood.

A book that explores issues such as identity, gender, indigenous culture and family ties.

This book narrates the encounter of a little girl with the nature that surrounds her which takes an important role of belonging in her life, and the connection she creates with her own culture and people.

A mapuche girl goes from the countryside to the city, and through her journey she allows us to take a subtle glimpse to the way identity is constructed. The garden, the song her grandmother used to sing, the connection with nature, the visits to the market and the voice of the other children would be forever linked to the memory of the protagonist and the attentive reader.

Is it possible to make a book about the ephemeral that endures?

In the depth that the mirrors hide when no one is reflected in them, in the happiness of a distant family aroma, in the leave that returns with a known flavor, in the sensation that transmits a caress that passed through our body, is where the author invites us to contemplate daily life and reflect on what happens with the little things, almost imperceptible, when they are gone.
